Selecting our Medical Students
UBC MD Undergraduate Program would like you to consider becoming an interviewer

What part does the interview play?

- Interviews are conducted for the most competitive applicants after a preliminary evaluation to the MD Undergraduate Program has been completed

Who gets an interview?

- The 650-700 candidates deemed most competitive for the 288 positions available in the MD Undergraduate Program, as based on their academic and non-academic performance

What is the format of the interview?

- We use the Multiple Mini-Interview (MMI) format, where each invited applicant will meet 10 different interviewers
- Each interview lasts for 7 minutes and is preceded and followed by a 2 minute transition period. For more information, and to see a sample cycle, visit: http://mdprogram.med.ubc.ca/admissions/interviews/

Who are the MMI interviewers?

- The interviewers are chosen to represent the interests of the province and the medical school in selecting the best candidates to be future students, colleagues, and physicians
- Interviewers are therefore a mix of academics, faculty members, clinicians, community representatives, patients and 3rd & 4th year UBC medical students, and are from a wide range of geographies within BC

What are the requirements for becoming an Interviewer?

- Interviewers must reside in BC, and have resided in the province for the last 2 years.
- Previous interviewing experience is preferred but not required.
- Interviewers must complete a simple ~10 minute application.
- To avoid conflict of interest, we cannot consider someone who has or knows of a family member, or other personal relationship that can be reasonably construed as a conflict of interest (friend, close acquaintance, etc.) applying to the UBC Faculty of Medicine MD Undergraduate Program either currently or in the near future. We also cannot consider someone who is thinking about applying to medicine in the future.
- After all applications are submitted, the Interview Administrative Team will review applications from all potential interviewers
- In order to ensure diversity with our interview pool, interviewers are selected based on their background, regional distribution, and availability. If you are not selected to interview this year, we strongly encourage you to apply again as we attempt to have both new and returning interviewers every year.

- Please keep in mind that certain categories of interviewers often generate more interest than others, and in order to uphold our commitment to diversity we will unfortunately be unable to accommodate all interested parties. Because of this, if you are not invited to interview this year we will keep you in our database and notify you of future opportunities (unless you advise us otherwise).

What is the time commitment?
